What did you learn?

The Father's Day celebration provided a joyful opportunity to strengthen the bond between children and their fathers through thoughtfully curated activities. Fathers actively participated in "Papa on Stage!" events such as singing and storytelling, bringing laughter, learning, and warmth into the classroom. The event also encouraged creative expression, especially through the dress code themes—"Twinning" and "What Do You Aspire to Be." It was heartening to witness fathers support their children's imaginative dreams, whether dressed as superheroes or professionals.

Key takeaways:

- Parental involvement in school activities boosts children's confidence and emotional well-being.
- Interactive sessions like singing and storytelling can be powerful tools for language and emotional development.
- Themed dress-up encourages creativity and allows children to explore aspirations with their families.
- Celebrations like these foster a sense of community and shared joy among students, parents, and teachers.

How is it relevant to your school context?

Events like Father's Day align beautifully with Dominic Savio Kindergarten's ethos of holistic and joyful education. They foster positive school-home relationships, which are essential for a child's early development. Through such celebrations, children experience learning beyond the classroom in an emotionally supportive and encouraging environment.

How will you apply it with students in the classroom/beyond?

The stories and songs shared by fathers will be revisited during class sessions to reinforce learning through familiarity. Children can be encouraged to share family traditions, express aspirations, and engage more confidently in storytelling and singing activities. This also opens doors for further collaborative events involving parents.

What could have been better?

While participation was enthusiastic, a rehearsal or briefing session for the fathers could have enhanced stage confidence and time management during performances.

What was done well?

The event was well-organized with clear communication to parents. The dual-batch format ensured crowd management and smooth conduct. Children were visibly excited and proud, which highlighted the success of the event in making meaningful memories.

Do you have any suggestions?

In the future, a photo booth or keepsake activity like a handprint card could be added to make the day even more memorable. Additionally, expanding "Papa on Stage!" to include a simple dance or game could further engage diverse talents.
